

Dr. Kathleen (Kiki) Traylor, a physician and former Colorado State Senator, leads government affairs for Amgen in seven Western states. Dr. Traylor's work focuses on building coalitions to create consensus on healthcare policy. She's a trusted voice and advocate at statehouses across the Western U.S., offering a unique perspective on innovation, patient health and healthcare delivery gained from her background caring for patients and representing constituents.

Dr. Traylor joined the Amgen State Government Affairs team in 2007 and is based in Colorado. She provides leadership on state legislative issues in Colorado, Wyoming, South Dakota, North Dakota, Kansas, New Mexico and Arizona.

Prior to Amgen, Dr. Traylor served as a member of the Colorado State Senate, where she sat on the Health and Human Services and Judiciary Committees.

She actively treated patients for more than 20 years, practicing primary care pediatrics in private practice, hospital-based primary care, insurance-based managed care, and foster care clinic settings. Most recently, she was affiliated with Children's Hospital Colorado and the University of Colorado School of Medicine (Associate Clinical Professor), where she saw patients in the Foster Care Clinic.

She is a graduate of the University of Colorado School of Medicine (M.D. with Honors) and Stanford University (B.A., Human Biology).
